

2000-78-63

University of Alaska Fairbanks students talk about what they like about the university

Interviews with students: Kate Kristin and Todd

Unidentified interviewer

1980s

Series: University focus

University of Alaska campus in Fairbanks, Alaska

Unidentified students talk about the reason they chose the University of Alaska Fairbanks for college.

The first unidentified student talks about her interest in basketball. She made the team at the university. The interviewer asks the student what was the primary reason she came to UAF. She said it was accessible, near home and mostly because it was in Alaska. The interviewer asked about the strengths of UAF compared to other schools. The student said UAF is not a huge school and the classes aren't overwhelming because of size. The interviewer asked if she was getting a quality education. She said believes it is a quality education. She has been free to choose what she is studying. She thinks it is a competitive education. The interviewer asked if she would recommend UAF to prospective students. She said she would recommend UAF to be at home at least for their first year. The interviewer asked what she considers the best part of being at UAF. The student said the accessibility of the faculty. It is importance to her.

Unidentified interviewer said this is take two.

Repeat of the questions and answers.

Talk about voice levels. The student talks about playing softball.

The interviewer talks with a second and third student and repeats the set of questions.