BARROW

Sadie Neakok, 88

Former Barrow Magistrate Sadie Brower Neakok, 88, died June 12, 2004, in her Barrow home, surrounded by family.

Neakok

A service was Tuesday in Barrow.

Mrs. Neakok was born March 10, 1916, in Barrow to Charles Brower, one of the first white settlers there, and Asiaiq gataq, an Inupiaq woman. She spent her childhood in Barrow, where her father ran a whaling station. Neakok left Barrow to attend high school in San Francisco from 1930 to 1934, to work for Alaska Vocational School in 1935 and 36 to pursue college studies at the University of Alaska Fairbanks from 1937 to 1938. Then she returned to Barrow for good. She married Barrow whaling captain Nathaniel Neakok on July 17, 1940, and together they raised 13 children.

Mrs. Neakok was devoted to serving Alaskans, particularly the Inupiat people of the North Slope. She was a Bureau of Indian Affairs teacher from 1939 to 1940 and 1945 to 1947, a public health volunteer from 1948 to 1950 and the Barrow social worker from 1954 to 1960. In 1958, she was ordained as the first woman elder of the Utqiagvik Presbyterian Church. In 1966, shortly after statehood, she was appointed magistrate for Barrow and served as the Alaska Court System's sole judicial representative for the vast North Slope region from the only court facility that existed then — her kitchen table. Her influence on the state's legal system extended beyond Barrow through her work training other magistrates at regional and statewide conferences.

In 1987, UAF awarded Neakok an honorary doctorate of laws degree. She also received numerous other awards for her life's work. In 1989, the University of Washington Press published her biography, "Sadie Brower Neakok, An Inupiaq Woman." She is survived by family members in Barrow and around the state.

Mrs. Neakok was preceded in death by her husband, Nathaniel; children, Peter, Glenn and Robert Neakok; and siblings, Thomas Brower Sr., Kate Brower Sakeagak, David Brower Sr., Jenny Brower Dimond, Robert Brower Sr., William Brower, Mary Brower Stotts Adams and Harry Brower Sr.

Cards and remembrances may be sent to the Neakok family, P.O. Box 276, Barrow 99723.

gree theft and fraudulent use of credit cards. He was charged because he used the fraudulent credit cards for more than $50,000 worth of local and Internet purchases, court documents say, and he wrote checks on Northern Electric's accounts for personal expenses.

Darlene Eaves is in custody at Highland Mountain Correctional Center on an unrelated probation violation. Her arraignment on the embezzlement indictment is scheduled for Tuesday.

Christopher Eaves was released from Mat-Su Pretrial Facility in late May after posting bail, a records sergeant said. He does not have a listed telephone with those cards totaled more than $150,000, Ridling's affidavit says. Eaves printed, forged and cashed and deposited company business checks totaling more than $100,000 into her own business account and personal accounts, the affidavit says.

Ultimately, according to investigators, Eaves took a total of $347,668.87 from Northern Electrical accounts.

Why two years for prosecutors to obtain an indictment?

Troopers in the Anchorage white-collar crime office needed time to track missing funds, Ridling said. Then the case got stalled behind homicide cases with a higher priority at the Palmer district attorney's office.
